Content does not mean happiness. Doubt is the mother of truth. Better a storm that destroys and at the same time brings health than the calm that stagnates, rots and brings death. A cyclone of discontent is shaking this country and other countries to-day. This means that the people are thinking and that they are fast coming to believe that there is a remedy for the evils under which the masses suffer, and the hard conditions that grind the faces of the poor.

Every beneficial society, every new party, every organization whether political religious, social or ethical, that has for its purpose the improvement of the material condition of the masses, is a means more or less effectual on of the death of the bread-winner.

The question of a Greater New York is vital At that time the population of the city

> Leaving out London, according to the last census, the following are the cities having a population of 1,000,000 and over: Paris, 2,447,-957; New York, 1,801,739; Canton, estimated 1,600,009; Berlin, 1,579,244; Tokto, Japan, 1,589,244; Vienna, 1,364,548; Philadelphia, 1,142,653; Chicago, 1,099,850; St. Petersburg, 1,003,310; Pekin, 1,000,000. A school population taken in Chicago in 1892, reveals an estimated population of 1,499,000. There are cities in China whose estimated population is over 1,000,000, but it is not safe to count them. The city having the largest population under the 1,000,000 figure is Brooklym, which, according to the State census of 1892.

reaching New Jersey, and then the Uttleheard, of but still progressing North River tunnel will be burried to completion.

It is very generally known that the docks and plors of New York are among the meanest and worst in the world, but it is not known that the greater part of the freight ships entering New York Bay are docked in Brooklyn, where the warehouses and the facilities for loading and unloading are better, if far from being the best. One who has seen the docks on the Thames or at Liverpool, or in any of the European ports along the Atlantic or the Mediterranean, cannot compare them with those of New York and Brooklyn, for there is no comparison. But once consolidation is assured, work would be begun along the shores of the great harbor, that would not only vastly increase the shipping accommodations, but The Emperor sent a handsome purse some years later, to the old farmer whose hease, ten years before, had sheltered him and his future wife. In an address not long ago, he spoke of the Empress in marked terms of affection, and there is no doubt that their marked life in happy and they are deeply attached to each other.

have no divided allegiance in their voting, for the home as well as the business would be considered. With a greater New York, an academy of art worthy the great metropolis would spring up, to be followed by institutions for the teaching of music, the arts, special courses in medicine and law, and the hundred and one means of culture that are only possible in a great community, that how strong boad pride without being prehas strong local pride without being pro-with such a city, New York would soon be with Lossion and Paris, and many of the rich Americans, who spend every year $250,000,000 abroad, would see the great social and educational advantages of the great American Metropolis and make it their home. The movement for consolidation has been checked by the trick of crippling amendments, but that success is sure to come, no one can doubt who has given the
